Statement

I am exploring how the subtlety of sound and technology can inspire social and environmental change. My work thrives on the idea that art can instigate shifts in perception, using subtle noises to catalyze reflection and actions towards societal change. I consider sound as a dynamic social ecosystem, using interactive installations, workshops, and music compositions to engage audiences in re-imagining their sense of place, cultural identities, and relationships, while exploring the roles and meanings of sound within our society.

I love transforming everyday materials and overlooked objects into interactive installations. A crinkling plastic bag, a softly vibrating motor a jittering recycled CD player—these are the humble elements I use to create spaces for contemplation, resistance and reflection that challenge us to see the overlooked and engage with the world in new, meaningful ways.

Lately, my practice has focused on considering workshops, classes, and experimental moments of knowledge sharing as integral parts of my artistic exploration. I believe that these collaborative exchanges are vital for nurturing creativity and cultivating deeper connections to the themes I investigate. It's in these collaborative spaces that creativity grows and deeper connections form, turning learning itself into a medium for change.
